By Professor Tony Attwood & Dr Michelle Garnett Until recently, the gender ratio for autism was estimated as four boys for each girl. However, clinicians are increasingly receiving referrals for diagnostic assessments of girls and women, and a recent research study has established a ratio of two to one (Rutherford, McKenzie and Johnston 2016).

What Exactly Is Camouflaging? - Attwood and Garnett Events

Tony Attwood only contributes at the start of the book. As a woman with Aspergers who works with people with Aspergers and has a son with Aspergers, I found this book inaccurate in places, annoying in others and some of the contributing writers even contradicted each other.

After listening to Dr Attwood's presentation, I could have cried - in so many ways, he was describing me! It has been generally accepted that the prevalence of Asperger Syndrome in girls is about 1:4 of that found in boys, but Dr Attwood believes this to be more like one girl to every two boys.

Dr Tony Attwood's views on Asperger's and girls - Special ...

Dr Tony Attwood has been a major contributor to the debate in Asperger's Syndrome in women and girls. Under the umbrella of autistic spectrum disorder, diagnosis has been underestimated in females. Predominantly thought of as a condition for boys and men, more and more research is finding that women and girls are a hidden sub-culture within the fold of the rainbow.
