Well we're gonna say that, all right, this electric field, the first thing I can say is this net electric field is just gonna point in the x direction. So this is just really in the x direction, all I really care about is the electric field in this horizontal direction, and it's gonna be equal to the sum of the electric fields each charge ...

Net electric field from multiple charges in 1D - Khan Academy

A charge, a stationary charge, is obviously pulled or pushed by a static electric field. And it also creates its own static electric field. So it's always in the back of your mind. Because if you keep studying physics, you're going to actually prove to yourself that electric and magnetic fields are two sides of the same coin.
